Subject Intent:

The History curriculum serves three purposes. It is designed to offer our students a wide range of knowledge about the events of the world from the Medieval period through to the late 20th Century. Students will then gain a wider understanding of their own world and their own environment, piquing interest in local, national and world politics as well as being able to empathise with individual and social group's situations both within the past and also within the present.

The History curriculum is also designed to prepare our students for the rigours of GCSE and other obstacles they may face in the near future. We use the curriculum to test key skills, such as chronology, cause and consequence, utility and significance. Aspects of the course mirror the GCSE specification, in content as well as skill-set. Our curriculum is adapted to suit all needs, including SEND, to ensure that every child can access the information, tasks and skills needed for future study.

The History curriculum is also designed to interest and challenge our students. We aim to ensure that the pupils are engaged in our lessons and that we create enquiring minds who want to discover more about our past and then subsequently our present and future. We have chosen topics which will stimulate and inspire the students, making them keen historians and active participants in our lessons and their wider learning.
